

Chester Zoo launches Borneo conservation project

[Clip from BBC iWonder]

[Helen Skelton]

Animals that are content are more likely to breed, and this is important for supporting endangered species. Chester Zoo has a breeding centre but they're also helping orangutans in the wild.

In Borneo they're building orangutan bridges to link up pockets of existing habitat. As animal habitats come under increasing threat from human damage, caring for endangered animals is ever-more important.