

Spelling and Punctuation: Homophone Chaos

Look at the story below. The homophones are mixed up and all over the place. Identify the incorrect spellings and write the correct spelling above it. There are 34 incorrect homophones in total.

The Adventures of the Homophone Cat

It was Halloween, which is a grate knight for a black cat. Homophone sneaked out of the house and down the back alley. She decided to go somewhere she'd never bean before and was looking forward to an adventure. In cat legend, Halloween was the night when the vale between worlds was very thin and it was possible to see, hear or smell spirits who had past over into the next world. Cats may seem like loan personalities, but they actually have a strong connection to there family and tell tails of they're ancestors to there children so that the history they share will knot bee lost. Homophone wanted to go to her friend's plaice two sea if they could contact a relative who had past over sum years before and who was sorely mist. She'd never bean before as it was a risky business to get their.

Homophone was making her way towards the boarder between her territory and that of the cat next door. It was a dangerous game. He wasn't very fare and wouldn't even let her travel through his area if he could help it. This was against the Cat Code, which maintained that ewe should always allow other cats to come threw yore territory as long as they meant you know harm.

Homophone thought Sirius was probably out on his own adventure tonight. Luckily, she had guest correctly and Sirius was nowhere to be seen. Homophone reckoned she could get across his land and back before he new anything about it.

She was cunning like that.

Once on the other sighed, Homophone darted quickly down a dark and fowl smelling lain. Her friend Twister was a wild cat and had set up home in a pretty vial and ruff part of town. It was a good way to make sure no-one found her and tried to make her live with a family. Twister was no house cat, she was rood and untamed and didn't care for people at all.

Extension Task: Write the next two paragraphs of Homophone's adventures.

Use as many incorrect homophones as you can. Give it to a friend to see if they can spot them.

Spelling and Punctuation: Homophone Chaos - Answer Sheet

The Adventures of the Homophone Cat

It was Halloween, which is a great night for a black cat. Homophone sneaked out of the house and down the back alley. She decided to go somewhere she'd never been before and was looking forward to an adventure. In cat legend, Halloween was the night when the veil between worlds was very thin and it was possible to see, hear or smell spirits who had passed over into the next world. Cats may seem like lone personalities, but they actually have a strong connection to their family and tell tales of their ancestors to their children so that the history they share will not be lost. Homophone wanted to go to her friend's place to see if they could contact a relative who had passed over some years before and who was sorely missed. She'd never been before as it was a risky business to get there.

Homophone was making her way towards the border between her territory and that of the cat next door. It was a dangerous game. He wasn't very fair and wouldn't even let her travel through his area if he could help it. This was against the Cat Code, which maintained that you should always allow other cats to come through your territory as long as they meant you no harm.

Homophone thought Sirius was probably out on his own adventure tonight. Luckily, she had guessed correctly and Sirius was nowhere to be seen. Homophone reckoned she could get across his land and back before he knew anything about it.

She was cunning like that.

Once on the other side, Homophone darted quickly down a dark and foul smelling lane. Her friend Twister was a wild cat and had set up home in a pretty vile and rough part of town. It was a good way to make sure no-one found her and tried to make her live with a family. Twister was no house cat, she was rude and untamed and didn't care for people at all.